Nixon Expounds Wage Policies to Hostile AFL-CIO

By Ken W. Clawson

BAL HARBOUR, Fla., Nov. 19 (WP).—President Nixon told a hostile AFL-CIO convention today that his economic game plan for Phase 2 will proceed with or without organized labor.

As 2,000 labor officials listened scornfully, the President said that his obligation to halt the rise in the cost of living was to everyone, not just labor, and that he intended to fight inflation "to the extent that my powers allow it."

Mr. Nixon was plainly taking up the challenge issued yesterday when AFL-CIO president George Meany said that labor would continue its representation on the Pay Board only under certain conditions. Mr. Meany said that if the President didn't want labor membership "on our terms," then he "knows what he can do."

The President said today: "I know exactly what I can do—and I am going to do it. I think it is time that we all understand just where we stand on this . . ."

But even this tough rejoinder to Mr. Meany stirred little open reaction among delegates, who had been told to sit on their hands in what one labor official termed "silent contempt" when the President appeared.

Some Slay Seated

When Mr. Nixon entered the Americana Hotel ballroom, there was no band to play "Hail to the Chief" as has been customary for the appearances of previous chief executives. Delegates gave the President polite applause, but many of them did not even stand.

There was no live radio or television coverage of the President's address, although it had been requested. An AFL-CIO official said that broadcast media did not request live coverage of Mr. Meany's speech yesterday, and "what's good enough for George Meany is good enough for Richard Nixon."

After the President spoke, the 77-year-old Meany did not acknowledge his presence and Mr. Nixon was escorted off the platform. When Mr. Nixon started shaking hands with delegates along his exit route, Mr. Meany rapped his gavel and ordered: "All convention delegates and guests, take their seats."

When the President had left the building, Mr. Meany leaned on the rostrum and said: "Now let us proceed with Act II."

The audience roared, whistled, stamped its feet and gave Mr. Meany a standing ovation. The reception of Mr. Nixon was uncharacteristic of the usually boisterous federation convention.

President Nixon acknowledged at the beginning of his impromptu speech—he discarded his prepared text, commenting it was a "laundry list" of labor-oriented accomplishments by his administration—that he had been advised.

U.S. Pay Unit Eases Stand For Coal Pact

Increase Is Almost Triple 5.5% Norm

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP).—The Pay Board voted today to permit the first-year provisions of the recently settled coal contract to take effect without modification.

By a 10-to-3 vote, the board found that the provisions "were not unreasonably inconsistent with the criteria adopted by the board."

The Pay Board members who represent business said that they support the wage increases and other benefits, previously scheduled to take effect a week ago, because more than 4 percent of the labor-cost rise is designed to make the United Mine Workers' welfare fund solvent. The balance of the 15 percent first-year increase is permissible for the coal industry because of "the imperative need of the industry to expand and attract new employees into its work force," they said.

Three of the board members representing the public issued a dissent, saying that the first-year provisions of the three-year contract are unreasonable because of the board's standard of limiting pay rates to annual increases of 5.5 percent. Two members abstained. Mr. Jacoby and chairman George Boldt.

Mr. Boldt generally abstains unless his vote is necessary to break a tie. Mr. Jacoby said he feared a potential conflict of interest because of his connection with a coal company.

[The board did not rule on clauses covering the last two years of the contract, which in all provides an estimated 39 percent increase, including a doubling of payments to the UMWA pension fund, UPI reported.]

The settlement ended a costly 45-day national coal strike which idled more than 100,000 workers.

Mrs. Meir 'Demands' More Jets Admits Strained Links With U.S.

TEL AVIV, Nov. 19 (UPI).—Premier Golda Meir said today Israel will "demand" more Phantom jet fighter-bombers from the United States to correct the military imbalance in the Middle East.

She also said U.S. assessment of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat made the present strained relations between Israel and the United States inevitable.

Addressing the Israeli Bar Association, Mrs. Meir commented on reports from Washington that the Russians had sent between six and 10 Tu-16 Badger medium bombers to Egypt armed with air-to-ground missiles.

The reports, said Secretary of State William F. Rogers, were not aware the Badgers had been sent to Egypt when he said Nov. 15 that the United States did not believe the arms balance had swung against Israel.

Change for the Worse

"Today, we heard for the first time since Mr. Rogers made his statement Nov. 15 that there has been a change for the worse in the military balance," Mrs. Meir said.

"Today, they have announced in the name of the State Department that not all is well."

Mrs. Meir made the comments a few hours after the afternoon newspapers Yedioth Aharonoth and Maariv reported Defense Minister Moshe Dayan had postponed a planned visit to the United States so that Mrs. Meir could precede him to Washington within the next few weeks.

"She said Mrs. Meir personally wanted to sort out U.S.-Israeli relations 'at the highest possible level.'"

Mrs. Meir told the attorneys' luncheon, "There is strain between us and the Americans today. But we have no choice but to get into an argument with the United States."

"It is permissible, it is necessary, it is our duty to argue with the United States, the best friend we have today," she added.

The premier said Israel would not accept "no" as the answer to its request for more Phantom jet fighter-bombers.

"We think it is essential for us to demand the Phantoms for our survival, and therefore, our duty is to demand them now," Mrs. Meir said.

She also said she did not accept the peace plan Mr. Rogers put forward in 1969 and she did not accept the six points he put to the United Nations General Assembly last month.

"Under no conditions shall we accept this plan which embargoes (on Phantom supplies) is hanging over our heads, because Sadat does not like Phantoms in Israel, and because he (Continued on Page 2, Col. 2)

Ex-Ambassador Gives His Views

Drug Case Seen as All-French Affair

By James Goldborough

PARIS, Nov. 19 (UPI).—A former French ambassador today charged that elements in the French counter-espionage had organized the shipment of $12 million in heroin to the United States last April, and used former agent Roger Delouette, to settle an old score.

Roger Barberot, formerly Ambassador to Uruguay, said that the real name of the mysterious "Col. Fournier" whom Delouette has in turn named as the ringleader of the dope smuggling is Paul Ferrer, currently a member of the Service de Documentation Extérieure et Contre-Espionnage. Mr. Ferrer was identified as a former air force sergeant who was given rank equivalent to that of colonel in the SDECE.

Ambassador Barberot, who is a real former much decorated colonel and well-known Gaullist, author and businessman, in addition to having been an ambassador from 1965 to 1968, said that intra-service rivalry within SDECE brought about the extraordinary situation.

In a statement made to Radio Luxembourg, Col. Barberot said that it appeared that the current drug scandal which is now being evoked on the highest government levels in Washington and Paris did not involve plots, rivalries or bad faith between U.S. and French officials, but stemmed from a house-cleaning begun at SDECE two years ago under President Georges Pompidou, in which many agents were fired and much bad blood created.

Col. Barberot's declaration created such a sensation here that the tape recording of the broadcast was ordered seized tonight by Judge Gabriel Roussel, who has been investigating the Delouette case. Delouette was arrested last April in New Jersey when he went to claim a Volkswagen Minibus in which 96 pounds of heroin had been hidden. He has told U.S. authorities that Mr. Fournier, alias Ferrer, was behind the smuggling attempt.

But Col. Barberot's remarks went much further than the Delouette case. He directly challenged the whole SDECE reorganization which was carried out by Mr. Pompidou's hand-picked man, Alexandre de Marenches, and he brought into the open what many observers had known for two years: that Mr. de Marenches changed the whole orientation of SDECE from a preoccupation with counter-espionage against the United States to one dealing with Communist activities.

This reorganization of SDECE, which is roughly the equivalent of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, was analyzed in detail in Le Monde today, and the newspaper's conclusion was similar to that of Col. Barberot, namely that Gen. de Gaulle was mostly interested in infiltrating the Anglo-American networks with French spies, whereas under Mr. Pompidou the emphasis has been on keeping tabs on the Communists.

Daylong Raid by Troops, Police

2 Monks Linked to Jailbreak, Ulster Monastery Is Searched

PORTLENONE, Northern Ireland, Nov. 19 (UPI).—More than 20 British soldiers and Ulster policemen staged a day-long raid today on a Roman Catholic monastery, the home of two monks captured last night with two suspected jailbreakers, the army said.

Troops sealed off this village in County Antrim at dawn and police swept into the Cistercian Monastery of Our Lady of Bethlehem. Forty-five monks of the silent order, whose members are known as Trappists, watched impassively, sandaled feet shuffling in new-fallen snow, as policemen searched the monastery chapel and buildings and troops scoured the town.

"The security forces are only doing their duty," the abbot, Brother Angus Dunfey, said. "They are doing it correctly. I can have no complaints."

A police spokesman said: "We went over everything with a fine-tooth comb, but we didn't find a thing."

An army spokesman denied London newspaper reports that troops had raided other Catholic Church property in Northern Ireland, scene of more than two years of battling between its Protestant majority and Roman Catholic minority.

Held Overnight

Police held the two monks—the Rev. Thomas O'Neill, 45, and Brother Patrick Sheehan, 48—overnight in Omagh after picking them up in a car heading for the Irish Republic.

Two other men in the car—Christopher Keenan, 21, and Daniel Mullen, 17—were two of nine men who escaped from Belfast's Crumlin Road jail on Tuesday, police said.

[According to the Associated Press, the two jailbreakers were wearing clerical garb when caught with the priests.]

The seven other escapees were still at large, police said. In Dublin, the Provisional wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army claimed the men were still hiding in the North.

Today, an Omagh court released on bail of £200 each the two monks, plus two businessmen whom police also charged with helping Mr. Keenan and Mr. Mullen to escape.

Abbot Dunfey said the two monks would remain at the monastery until called for trial, and, on that basis, they were freed on bail. They were charged with aiding jail breakers.

In Strabane, on the border, Eileen Kerr, 19, was wounded in the head when gunmen firing from the Irish Republic shot at British troops setting up roadblocks on the Ulster side of the border.

The army said the gunmen fired more than 40 shots at the troops in Strabane, the scene of serious rioting during the last 24 hours.

An army spokesman said the 16 soldiers involved had been in the town and Miss Kerr. Although troops returned the fire, it was not in her direction, he said.

In Dublin, British opposition Labor party leader Harold Wilson conferred with Premier Jack Lynch of the Irish Republic and later met leaders of a breakaway Irish party to discuss the problems of violence-torn Northern Ireland.

Details of the nearly two-hour session between Mr. Wilson, a former British prime minister, and Mr. Lynch were not disclosed. Irish officials said Mr. Lynch outlined his government's position.

Phnom Penh Defenses Hold; Saigon Sending 13,000 Men

PHNOM PENH, Nov. 19 (UPI).—Cambodian troops, including youths getting their first taste of combat, battled North Vietnamese troops to a standstill near Phnom Penh today. The situation was so serious South Vietnam agreed to send 13,000 men to help relieve the pressure, Cambodian military sources said.

The Cambodian Command said a force of 8,000 government troops, with the help of U.S. jet fighter-bombers and helicopter gunships, halted one force of 2,000 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong 11 miles outside Phnom Penh. The command has reported ed two North Vietnamese regiments—about 6,000 men—in the area.

Cambodian Command sources said a Cambodian task force would arrive in Cambodia shortly to help counter the current North Vietnam offensive, but said the South Vietnamese troops would not be positioned around the outskirts of Phnom Penh because of hostility between Cambodians and Vietnamese.

[The South Vietnamese plan could include relieving a 20,000-strong Cambodian task force cut off by North Vietnamese regulars about 50 miles north of Phnom Penh. Reuters said. A breakthrough to these stranded Cambodian troops would free more Cambodians to defend their capital. The recent fighting has resulted in heavy Cambodian casualties.]

[Adm. Thomas Moorer, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, said today he saw "no immediate, serious threat" to Phnom Penh, UPI reported from Washington. In an hour-long review of the Indochina military situation, for Pentagon newsmen, Adm. Moorer repeated several times that the North Vietnamese were hurting badly from a supply problem.]

Long convoys of ammunition trucks were seen this morning 80 miles northwest of Saigon at Tay Ninh, a frequent staging area for forays into Cambodia.

Military sources in Saigon and Phnom Penh refused to identify the target of the South Vietnamese operation, but speculation in both capitals mentioned two places—the Chup rubber plantation, a Communist stronghold 85 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, and an unidentified closer spot.

Meetings of Both Alliances Put Off Brosio Soviet Mission

MOSCOW, Nov. 19 (AP).—The Soviet Union will not receive a NATO emissary to discuss troop reductions in Europe until after the foreign ministers of the Warsaw Pact nations meet later this month, Western diplomatic sources disclosed tonight.

The sources said that the Soviet position meant that the NATO representative, Manlio Brosio, will not have time to meet with the Russians until after the NATO foreign ministers meet in Brussels, Dec. 8-10.

The sources explained that the Kremlin made it known today that Mr. Brosio would only be welcome in Moscow to begin preliminary discussions on mutual and balanced force reductions after Dec. 1.

Off-Season Excursion Rate Down $72

Eeman said the fe-robably either Feb.

1 or April 1, for the new fares would be decided in Geneva.

The announcement of agreement here came after presidents and board chairmen of all the scheduled airlines flying the Atlantic met for 15 hours over two days.

The executives decided on a three-tiered price structure. Low-cost fares will be charged in the off season, from Nov. 1 to March 31; highest fares during the peak season, June 1 to Aug. 31, and middle-level fares in the middle season in between. There is no middle season for fares now.

For a normal New York-London economy class ticket with no special conditions, winter round-trip fares will be $400, or $52 lower than now. During the peak season, the fare will remain at $522.

No change was made in first-class fares.

It was in the popular 23-to-45-day excursion fares where the most significant reductions were made. For a New York-London round-trip, the middle-season fare will be $320, with no comparable rate now, and the peak-season fare will be $200, or $42 less than now. Round-trip fares to Paris are approximately $10 higher in each case, with Frankfurt fares about $20 higher.

Youths Lose Discounts

Youth fares will be at the same rate as the excursion fares, ending the special discount, except that the time limitation will not apply.

The airlines also agreed to retain group fares, of 30 or 40 people traveling together, depending on the conditions. New York-London rates will be $180 in winter, $200 in middle season and $270 in summer, reductions of $10 to $17 from current fares.

The transatlantic controversy was touched off when Lufthansa, the West German airline, announced it would offer a $199 New York-London round-trip fare.

In return for going along with Lufthansa on the basic fare, the other airlines won higher fares in other categories.

Returns a Day After His Arrival

India's Envoy in Pakistan Briefly

NEW DELHI, Nov. 19 (Reuters)—India's new High Commissioner to Pakistan Jai Kumar Atal flew back to New Delhi today for consultations within 24 hours of presenting his credentials to President Mohammed Yahya Khan.

No fewer than five incidents of firing across the border have been reported within the past 48 hours—in Kashmir, West Bengal, Meghalaya, Tripura and Assam. The incidents appeared to be less serious than others that have occurred recently and in no way comparable with fighting on the East Pakistan border at the end of last month, full details of which are only now being disclosed.

The battle followed an Indian foray across the border to silence guns a mile inside East Pakistan that had been shelling Indian territory for 11 days.

The Defense Ministry announced at the time that Indian forces had "taken some action" to stop the shelling, but refused to say whether they had crossed the border.

Kamalpur is now an abandoned town surrounded by lush green rice fields pock-marked by craters and other signs of shell fire.

Sign of a Thaw

The only sign of thaw in chilly Indo-Pakistan relations has come with the lifting of restrictions on the movement of the staff of diplomatic missions, which was halted last April after the East Pakistan flare-up and the defection to the "Bangla Desh" secessionist movement of many of the staff of Pakistan's mission in Calcutta.

Diplomats and other staff of each country's mission began returning home today as the visa restrictions were lifted.

A debate in the Rajya Sabha (upper house of Parliament) on a motion demanding action to insure the return home of East Pakistani refugees "in safety and honor" within three months ended inconclusively today.

No Deadline on Refugees

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi—who is 54 today—told a press conference in Bhubaneswar during a tour of parts of Orissa devastated by a recent cyclone that the government had set no deadline for the return of the refugees.

Speaking of the refugee crisis in a radio broadcast last night, President V.V. Giri said India is reaching the end of its patience and resources.

He accused Pakistan of adopting a war posture and warned: "We are fully prepared to meet any threat to our integrity."

Pakistan Report

DACCA, East Pakistan, Nov. 19 (AP)—Pakistan forces repulsed at least four Indian Army thrusts along the jumpy East Pakistan border yesterday, killing 21 Indian soldiers and wounding more than 50, a military source said last night.

He said two Pakistani soldiers were killed and five wounded in the clashes.

The army source reported that 450 Indian troops, backed by artillery, struck in the Chittagong hill tracts across the border from the Indian state of Tripura.

Twelve Indians were reported killed in that attack.

Other Fighting

Other attacks were reported in the Noakhali and Sylhet districts.

Meanwhile, military authorities in East Pakistan ordered trenches dug by all house owners and government departments "without delay" in case of air raids.

Hundreds of trenches have already been dug in and around Dacca, but the authorities stressed this must be intensified in view of the "present situation."

Practice blackouts have been held in the last few weeks.

UN Informed That Fighting Imperils Aid to E. Pakistan

By Kathleen Teltsch

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 19 (NYT)—The head of the UN relief operation in East Pakistan warned yesterday that active opposition from "any quarter" would curtail the aid program to cease.

The warning by Assistant Secretary-General Paul Marc Henry is known to reflect rising fears here that the humanitarian activity run by 85 UN officials is jeopardized by stepped-up military activities by the West Pakistani Army and by the guerrilla forces of East Pakistan.

The underlying theme of the relief chief's remarks in the General Assembly's Social Committee was that the collapse of the world body's relief program would be calamitous for all political factions.

Refugee Solution

Earlier, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, insisted that voluntary repatriation of the East Pakistani refugees who have fled across the border into India offers the only "viable and lasting solution" in the present crisis.

Mr. Sadruddin, attempting to steer a neutral course, remarked that the Indian government says

9,744,404 refugees now are on Indian soil, while Pakistan says there are 2,002,523.

However, he also quoted the estimate of World Bank authorities that there will be nine million in refugee camps by the end of the year.

He also emphasized that the relief needs of the refugees will come to $700 million in the year ending March, 1972, and that only $247,600,000 in foreign help has been contributed or pledged.

The high commissioner, whose office has become the focal point of all aid to refugees funneled through the United Nations, gave a pessimistic outlook on the situation.

"The suffering is not over, but continues. The gap between needs and resources, which has consistently been adverse, threatens catastrophically to become a chasm."

has to be tempted to reopen the Suez Canal," she said.

Mrs. Metz said that while taking Egypt's threats of renewed conflict seriously, Israel did not want war.

"I have no doubt that should they attack us, it will end up like in 1967. We don't want it. We are most sensitive to the price we are paying for victory.

"President Sadat has said he is willing to lose a million soldiers. I am not willing to sacrifice even a soldier's finger if there is no need for it," she said.

Threat to U.S. Fleet

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (UPI)—A new group of Soviet Tu-16 Badger bombers which have been observed in Egypt are equipped with air-to-surface missiles that could be used against shipping, diplomatic sources said today.

The sources here said the missiles, which have a cruise range of about 120 miles, would presumably be a threat primarily to the U.S. Sixth Fleet, in the Mediterranean.

The State Department yesterday disclosed that several Tu-16 bombers, configured as reconnaissance aircraft, had appeared among the Soviet air forces in Egypt after Nov. 1.

Yahya Asks Where Russians Would Stand in Case of War

PARIS, Nov. 19 (UPI)—Sultan Mohammed Khan, Pakistan's top-ranking diplomat, said today that his country has been seeking clarification from the Soviet Union on how Moscow would interpret the Indo-Russian security treaty in the event of a full-scale war between Pakistan and India.

Mr. Khan said the Pakistani state secretary for foreign affairs—there has been no foreign minister since martial law was declared in 1969—said at a press conference that at present East Pakistan is "ringed" with eight Indian divisions, and that nine to 10 Indian divisions face West Pakistan.

"No soldier or politician would ever dream of taking on an adversary five times his size," he said.

Mr. Khan said the Pakistanis have been pressing the Soviet Union for clarification of the Indo-Soviet treaty because the Indians are "interpreting it to mean that the Soviets would aid India in the event of a conflict with Pakistan."

Drug Case: French Affair

(Continued from Page 1) days of the Free French, he left the navy in 1947 only to return to serve as an army colonel during the Algerian war. He was a co-founder of one of the Gaullists' leftist movements and served the government in Africa before becoming ambassador.

Being a so-called "leftist Gaullist" however, he developed an anti-American reputation which would indicate he has little sympathy for the SDECE reforms of Mr. de Marenches.

Col. Barberot, 56, has no official relationship with SDECE. However, he was Delouette's employer in the Bureau for Agricultural Development, for which Col. Barberot is still the titular head and for which Delouette worked as an agricultural specialist.

Moreover, Col. Barberot, as a former military man working in such sensitive areas as Africa and Latin America, would be well-placed to follow SDECE activities. He came to know Delouette well, he said today, and eventually fired him, not for his SDECE activities but because he was "an impulsive man, who worked in spurts, and then lost interest."

When asked by a RTL reporter why Delouette would have named Mr. Fournier, also known as "Le Moudé" and who was one of the purge victims settling a score with a survivor.

In any case, and despite his reputation as not particularly pro-American, Col. Barberot's conclusion was that, contrary to what some French newspapers have been printing, it was not the U.S. secret services that were out to embarrass France, but former French officials.

The French have so far shown that they are not at all inclined to accept Delouette's accusations, and this new information from Col. Barberot, which implies that a whole band of disgruntled former French agents may have been involved, certainly does little to pinpoint the responsibility.

U.S. Calls for a World On Special Accords of

By Victor Lusinchi

GENEVA, Nov. 19 (NYT)—The United States called today for an international study to determine the extent to which the position of World War II trading system has been eroded by departures from the rules on which it was founded.

The proposal was the opening shot by the United States in the 80-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade for a show-down over the issue of preferential trade agreements that have brought it to loggersheads with the European Economic Community.

Hubert F. Propps, a member of President Nixon's trade negotiations staff, said the proliferation of special and preferential trading arrangements over the past 10 years had already placed the GATT structure in "grave danger."

These departures from the most-favored-nation clause, which guarantees that a trade concession made by one GATT member to another is available to all, are nearing the point where they are becoming the rule rather than the exception, the U.S. delegate said at the GATT assembly here.

Mr. Propps said a GATT study showed that in 1967, of $112 billion worth of manufactured goods

Nixon vs. Congress on Vietnam

President Nixon has set himself against a majority in Congress and the nation with his curt rejection of a congressional declaration that it is "the policy of the United States" to withdraw all of its military forces from Indochina at the earliest practicable date... subject to the release of all American prisoners of war.

The President may be constitutionally correct in choosing to ignore what is essentially a nonbinding amendment to the military procurement authorization bill. But he has made a grievous political error in stepping down a responsible congressional offer to share with him the heavy burden of extricating this nation from a costly and still perilous blunder by the best available means. By defying the will of Congress thus moderately expressed, Mr. Nixon invites more drastic measures to curb a presidential policy that points toward new American disasters in Southeast Asia.

That policy as defined by the President and his aides in recent days repeats mistakes of the past. While spurning opportunities for a negotiated settlement in Paris, the administration indicates an intention to pursue the illusion of military victory in Indochina through continuing unqualified support for the present Saigon regime. This support will include, according to the President's recent statement, not only vast sums of money and material, but a "residual force" of American ground troops and massive American air power for an indefinite period.

The Nixon policy condemns American prisoners of war to interminable internment. It places the slowly dwindling "residual force" in increasing peril of being overwhelmed by a still powerful enemy. It subjects the long-suffering peoples of Indochina to continuing terror and bloodshed, including the tragic civilian casualties which are the inescapable consequence of the wholesale use of air power.

The fresh dangers into which the Nixon policy is leading the nation is dramatically demonstrated by the current battle in Cambodia, where American helicopter gunships are engaged in close support of beleaguered Cambodian forces fighting only ten miles from their capital at Phnom Penh. This new direct American involvement in a widened conflict is only a portent of things to come if the President persists on his present course.

Kremlin Psychiatry

An interesting psychiatric diagnosis is in the news these days: Incipient schizophrenia accompanied by paranoid delusions of reforming society. One can well imagine a psychiatrist working for the secret police of Czar Nicholas II pronouncing this verdict on Lenin, or a psychiatric henchman of Stalin declaring a similar judgment on Khrushchev had the latter ever had the temerity to reveal his inmost thoughts before Stalin's death.

Just such a "diagnosis," given by a KGB "psychiatrist," did—as a matter of fact—provide the excuse for putting Soviet biologist Zhores A. Medvedev into a mental hospital last year after Professor Medvedev had gained world renown for his political dissent. More recently, Vladimir Bukovsky, a philologist, has come forward with evidence of subjection to similarly outrageous treatment.

The misuse of psychiatric personnel and institutions to incarcerate political heretics has a long history in Russia. It is one of the instruments open to a totalitarian regime with a medical system in which the loyalty of physicians belongs primarily to their governmental employer rather than to their patients.

Mr. Medvedev did not stay in an insane asylum very long because his imprisonment brought international protest, plus courageous representations from some of the Soviet Union's own most distinguished scientists. But other Soviet dissenters—more obscure figures without highly placed scientists as friends—remain prisoners in these institutions, often subjected to regimens intended to drive them insane, thus post facto justifying their incarceration.

At the very least, Moscow's flagrant abuse of this branch of medicine calls for protest by psychiatrists in all free countries. Such action was actually initiated recently by British psychiatrists at Sheffield University. To the degree that Soviet psychiatry has been perverted into an instrument of political repression, it has lost all standing in the outside world.

German Problems

Acute problems are arising, as was to be expected, in the negotiations between East and West Germany on implementation of the four-power agreement on West Berlin's communications through East Germany. It all looks wonderfully detente-ish for Russia magnanimously to declare that there will be no more arbitrary interference with traffic or illegal blockades and then to leave to the East and West Germans to work out the details. In fact it is proving difficult to find solutions that do not either leave bona-fide travelers as much exposed to interference from East German officials as before, or offend against basic democratic principles.

Herr Brandt is learning the hard way that dealings across the Iron Curtain are a one-sided and difficult affair.

Crisis in Bengal

The Bengal crisis has now reached its most dangerous stage. The claims from Delhi of a major border clash are yet another reminder of the ease with which the limited war which has been going on for months across the East Pakistan frontier could escalate any day into an open and full-scale conflict. Fortunately, Mrs. Gandhi is by now powerful enough to resist the hawks if she wishes. She must be constantly reminded by the Western governments to whom she has come for help that the chaotic uncertainties released by a Bengal war would dwarf even the horrors the year has so far seen.

Drug Case

The Delouette-Fourrier case is only a small tip of the immense drug iceberg. Attorney Stern appears to know much more about it... Who could inform him so well? One probably does not have to seek very far. Last August, John Cusack doubted the determination of Paris to break the drug mafia... His declaration raised a general outcry. The French police issued a sharp denial... The French position in the matter scarcely appears to have varied since then, since the government, SDECE and French diplomats in New York consider Delouette's charges without foundation. Better, yet, John Cusack, the man who brought the scandal to light, will soon leave Europe... He is most certainly the victim of the tension between the United States and France that resulted from his statements. One is entitled to believe that Paris asked for his recall and that Washington accepted the demand with the idea of mollifying the French side... But why does not France, which declares itself the spearhead of the anti-drug struggle, try to shed more light on that case? Who is hiding behind Delouette? Who is hiding behind Col. Fournier who is judged totally innocent by his chiefs?... When will this hide-and-seek game end?

Shakeup in Thailand

There are indications that Thanom Kittikachorn, who inherited a legacy of power from the corrupt hands of Field Marshal Sarit, has done away with the legal instruments of democracy not out of a personal desire for power but because Thailand is on the brink of a process of reorientation that can only be carried out with tightly-held reins. Japanese and other Asian observers suspect that, in reviewing its situation in recent weeks, Bangkok realized that the phase of "isolation at the side of America" must be replaced by a phase of understanding with Peking and Hanoi.

For centuries the Thai's fate has been determined by the agility of their kings and heads of government. Western moral principles have never prevented those leaders from trimming their sails to the wind. At present, with China gaining worldwide prestige and America pulling out of Indochina as a whole, it is no longer opportune for Thailand to be regarded by Peking as an "American vassal" and to maintain on behalf of a withdrawing power a network of military bases which, as is now commonly known, directly or indirectly serve the war in Vietnam.

The Uses of Adversity

By James Reston

NEW YORK—Almost everybody seems to be moaning low these days about wages and prices, but one of the good things about the bad economic news is that it brings men in power back to reality. This is one of the uses of adversity: It compels long-delayed thought and action; it strips away slack practices, and enables institutions to face the awkward problems they usually evade in more prosperous days.

George Meany, of the AFL-CIO, knew all along that America couldn't afford his hawkish Vietnam policy, his policies on welfare, social security, and wages, without pricing the nation out of the increasingly competitive world markets, and running his workers out of jobs. He is no fool, but prosperity tolerates foolishness, and now that the consequences are coming in, he is sticking on the Pay Board, with the outrageous argument that the fat cats are trying to drive him off it. Nevertheless, what prosperity failed to do, adversity is doing. George is putting up a big smoke screen but is finally retreating into common sense.

And now, confronted with a potentially disastrous financial and trade problem in the world, he has finally scrapped his ideological approach to the Soviet Union, and has sent off Secretary of Commerce Stans and a 10-man delegation to seek a substantial increase in trade with Moscow.

Like Meany, Nixon knew all along that the ideological approach to trade didn't keep the Soviet government from getting even the most sophisticated computers and scientific equipment from West Germany and Japan. After Willy Brandt made his peace with Moscow, and the Japanese started flying their commercial planes and sending their diplomatic and commercial agents to Moscow, the point was clear.

Even the most intricate American computers and other modern devices were going from Europe and Japan to the Soviet Union—all with the knowledge of the CIA—and years ago. But it was only when the American economy got into serious trouble in the world that it was possible to face the fact.

Nixon reads the returns—economic as well as political. In the third quarter of 1971, the United States had the largest balance of payments deficit—the difference between what the country takes in and what it spends abroad—in the history of the Republic.

He is a traditional Republican. Every party has its nightmare, and the nightmare of the Republican party is economic trouble—after all, the Republicans were out of power for 28 out of 36 years because the Democrats exploited and ran successfully against "the Hoover depression," and nobody knows this better than Richard Nixon.

Not so long ago, he vetoed a deal to have Henry Ford enter into a similar contract with the Soviet government, but that was when the economic slump at home didn't seem quite so ominous.

The objective facts are not really very different. Germany, Japan, and Britain, among others have been shipping sophisticated modern scientific and industrial equipment to the Soviet Union for years. Washington refused to do so, when it was prosperous, on ideological grounds, but since the recession and the unemployment, with an election coming up, it is taking a different view.

It is looking for business and votes. It is being forced by the bad economic news to do the things which it wanted to do, but could not quite do in good times, but is now forced to do when things are tough.

Accordingly, it is no accident that the President has just approved $633 million in export licenses to ship American equipment and technology to the Soviet Union's big new truck factory on the Kama River.

Rhodesia: The Two Nations

By Anthony Lewis

SALISBURY, Rhodesia.—In a country full of contradictions, one of the most surprising institutions is the University of Rhodesia. It is an outpost of multiculturalism in a world of white supremacy. This year there are 826 white students, 385 Africans and 65 of Asian or mixed ancestry.

But multiculturalism does not go far past the fact of mixed numbers at the university. Ask a series of African students how black-white relations are, and the answers all sound the same theme: "The university reflects the country. Relations can never be good here while they are bad outside."

"There is no basis for association."

"After all they are brought up to think of us as inferior. Remember that for most Europeans—I don't like that word, I mean whites—an African is a servant. "It is two nations."

The bitterness grows even sharper as the talk turns from politics to economics—to the prospect of a job after graduation. It is easy to see why. The brightest student in a recent class was said to be an African named Bedford Viki. He could not get a job in the civil service, although it hires white high school graduates as statisticians. Now was there anything in private industry that used his mathematical ability. He is now said to have a job paying $115 a month.

White high school graduates are taken by the civil service and trained in African customary law so that they can become local administrators. Africans with university degrees in public violated the embargo by buying Rhodesian ore and tobacco.

Like some of the onetime African nationalist leaders, they are prepared to try to work any settlement reached by Britain with the white rebel government. But they are cynical about the chances of the whites keeping what promises they make.

"We will accept whatever a settlement gives us," one said, "but if we have to, we shall work outside the constitution. In the end there can never be a real settlement until the Rhodesian whites accept us as equal, not think they can be a small superior class in a sea of blacks."

The bitterness grows even sharper as the talk turns from politics to economics—to the prospect of a job after graduation. It is easy to see why. The brightest student in a recent class was said to be an African named Bedford Viki. He could not get a job in the civil service, although it hires white high school graduates as statisticians. Now was there anything in private industry that used his mathematical ability. He is now said to have a job paying $115 a month.

White high school graduates are taken by the civil service and trained in African customary law so that they can become local administrators. Africans with university degrees in public administration cannot get those jobs. The only openings in the civil service are for messengers and the like.

There is a big shortage of nurses; the government is trying to interest older white women but will not take on Africans trained in England. There is just one African dentist in the government health service; a young man who has just got his college and dental degrees in the United States was told on his return here that there were no vacancies.

The best jobs are reserved for whites—by law or by professional custom or by union regulation. And so most of the African graduates of the university become teachers or leave for the black-run countries of Africa, most likely nearby Zambia or Botswana.

Africans, including the students, generally believe that their employment difficulties have been severely aggravated by economic sanctions against Rhodesia. That may be true, but some experts doubt that even the ending of sanctions and an investment boom here would open that many opportunities to educated Africans.

It must be said that black African countries, too, have a growing problem of university graduates who cannot find jobs

U.S. Peace Corps

As the current debate over American aid to foreign countries rages, your readers may be interested in what is happening to the Peace Corps in all of this. While the Peace Corps' funding authority is legislated separately from the foreign aid bill now being debated in Congress, it is obviously a part of the foreign aid program and as such is affected by the current general attitude surrounding the foreign aid concept.

The Peace Corps, now in its eleventh year, has changed and matured greatly since it began. We have far fewer volunteers in the field now (8,500) than we did in the "highwater" days of the mid-60s, but our programs have expanded into skill areas never dreamed of when the agency began. Our work in Liberia, once dominated by schoolteachers, is now diversified into some 40 skills covering teacher training, vocational education, agriculture, home economics, health education, public administration, self-help development, hospital staffing and others.

Keeping this program going requires money, but this year we are in bad trouble. The Peace Corps' budget has never been gigantic, averaging about $80 million the past few years. This year, the Nixon administration asked for only $82 million—an all-time low, and Congress has reduced the request below $80 million so far. The final appropriation could be reduced into the low 70s. This kind of reduction in spending authority amounts year to year to less than 1%.

The Peace Corps simply will not be able to meet program commitments already made to some 60 developing countries unless more funds are forthcoming. I would guess that we would need $10-15 million more than Congress is presently likely to approve. If the aid is not to increase government spending, $15 million pruned from the military budget would do very well, and would not be missed. ($15 million is approximately 1/40 of 1% of the military budget.)

Sweden and Vietnam

Re the Nov. 10 edition and the article on Swedish members of parliament accusing Mr. Nixon of refusing the Vietnam peace plan and referring to South Vietnam as a U.S. puppet state. Apparently having satisfactorily completed the task of turning their country into the moral cesspool of Europe and undermining its once-prosperous economy, the present regime in Stockholm has decided to devote its talents to morally improving the world, especially the U.S.A. The undemocratic Thai regime in South Vietnam, of course, is not very much to the liking of the majority of Americans. However, when compared to the arrogant, police-state dictatorship of the North (to which the 'Palme' government doesn't seem to object very much) the odor isn't quite so bad.

Long SALT Session Is Held, Negotiators 'Hard at Work'

VIENNA, Nov. 19 (Reuters)—American and Soviet delegates to the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks met for nearly three hours in a plenary session here today.

The second session of the sixth round of the top-secret SALT negotiations was one of the longest held in Vienna, and all but a few minutes at the end was taken up in formal talks.

Usually, a larger proportion of the twice-weekly meetings is given over to informal discussions.

Today's meeting included two set speeches by the heads of the respective delegations followed by general discussion on a mutual question-and-answer basis, conference sources said.

Atmosphere Unchanged

The sources also said there was no change in the atmosphere of the consultations—customarily described as businesslike and constructive, and without the introduction of polemics and extraneous issues.

No reference was made to China's first nuclear test for over a year, which was reported by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission yesterday, and the sources said they were not aware of any mention of NATO emissary Manlio Brosio's visit to Moscow.

Ambassador Graham Parsons, the highest-ranking State Department representative on the United States side, was in Brussels on Wednesday for routine consultations with NATO, conference sources confirmed today.

The sources took pains to stress that the timing of Mr. Parsons' trip to Brussels was just a matter of convenience and he could have otherwise just as well gone before the sixth round started this week, to brief NATO on the position at SALT.

The next plenary meeting—the 55th in the series which began in Helsinki two years ago—is to take place in the Soviet Embassy next Tuesday.

Supreme Court Refuses to Delay Kent State Trial

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP)—The Supreme Court declined today to delay the trial of a group of 25 persons on charges arising out of the 1970 Kent State University disorders.

The 25, including students, former students and faculty members, are charged with rioting during the campus protest May 4, 1970. Ohio National Guardsmen opened fire and killed four students and wounded nine.

The trial is scheduled to begin Monday in Ravenna, Ohio. Last Monday Justice Potter Stewart temporarily acted to hold up the trial until the full court could decide whether it should go ahead.

The six-to-one decision gave no indication of the justices' views. The dissenter was Justice William O. Douglas. He said he believes that the Ohio anti-riot laws are unconstitutional in broad and that they "infringe on freedom of expression protected by the First Amendment."

2 U.S. Radios In Europe Voted Funds by House

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (Reuters)—The House of Representatives today approved legislation authorizing $74 million for the continued operations of Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe for the next two years.

The House proposal, passed by a 271-to-12 vote, would also set up an independent nine-member commission charged with conducting a two-year study of the operations of the two stations and submitting recommendations to Congress.

The commission would be composed of members of Congress, the government and the public. The House proposal now goes before a joint Senate-House conference committee to resolve differences between the House and Senate versions.

The Senate, in a move to exercise greater congressional control over the operation of the two stations and to end covert Central Intelligence Agency financing, approved only a one-year authorization of $55 million.

Castro Sees Alternative to Latin Violence

Says Leftists Have
Political Openings

By Leonard Greenwood
CONCEPCION, Chile, Nov. 19.—The political left has opened up new avenues to power in Latin America in the past decade, Cuba's Premier Fidel Castro told 1,000 students packed into the forum of the University of Concepcion yesterday.

Mr. Castro said there is still the way of armed struggle, which he took in seizing power in Cuba 12 years ago, but new forces have entered the scene and there are "positive changes."

The Cuban leader listed these changes as the emergence of the Frente Amplio (the Broad Front), which unites all left-wing forces in Uruguay and which will contest the elections there Nov. 29, the emergence of the Catholic left and the creation of the left-wing military government of President Juan Velasco Alvarado in Peru.

But Mr. Castro refused to say whether Chile's President Salvador Allende is leading his country to socialism.

When a student from the extreme left-wing Socialist youth group asked him if the Chilean government could bring the country to socialism, Mr. Castro threw up his hands and said: "If I say no, how can I stay here?"

Then he turned away and, looking silently out over the crowd, made it clear that he would say no more.

It was an awkward moment, and other such moments followed.

Pressed Farther

The student body at Concepcion is led by an extreme left-wing activist group, the Revolutionary Left Movement (known here as MIR, for the Spanish initials), and a student quickly began another probe on the same subject.

—What errors does he see in the Chilean process? Mr. Castro returned to the microphones and told the students that he was not the one to judge the Chilean government.

Mr. Castro's dialogue with the students lasted almost four hours and at times he showed impatience.

Under a hot sun, the forum was filled by the time he arrived almost an hour late from a visit to the coal mines at Lota, south of Concepcion. At Lota he was given a warm reception by hundreds of mine workers and their families.

Mr. Castro's party said yesterday morning that Mr. Castro's doctor had told him to rest.

But there has been little sign of any easing up of the frantic pace of the tour. Mr. Castro shakes a thousand hands a day. He is slugged on the back, patted, hugged, pushed and pulled by crowds. His bodyguards repeatedly have to rescue him from masses of people who threaten to sweep him away.

All-German Talks Intensify; Progress Is Reportedly Made

BERLIN, Nov. 19 (AP)—The all-German talks in implementing the four-power Berlin agreement moved ahead with renewed intensity today, going deep into the night with a report of progress on essential issues.

At the same time, East Germany said it was "no errand boy" of the Western powers in attempts to fill in details of the four-power pact.

West German State Secretary Egon Bahr and East German State Secretary Michael Kohl conferred for the second straight day in East Berlin. A communiqué stated:

"In intensive negotiations . . . progress in a series of essential issues" was made.

(When the meeting ended tonight, Mr. Bahr said: "The way to the summit is clearly visible." Reuters said. He told reporters: "We have got through a large and difficult amount of hard work yesterday and today. Various part-complexes (of an agreement) have been completed and formulated.")

The Bahr-Kohl meetings will resume in Bonn next Wednesday and Thursday, the communiqué said. They are designed to improve Berlin access.

Parallel talks on the West Berlin-East Berlin level also took place in East Berlin today, striving to reach agreement on wall passage for West Berliners into East Berlin and East Germany.

West Berlin negotiator Ulrich Mueller flew to Bonn to report to Mayor Klaus Schumann, attending a meeting there, indicating he had something to discuss that could not wait. The next East-West Berlin meeting also is set for Wednesday.

The East Germans, meanwhile, announced that their Communist party's Central Committee met concerning forming a new government lineup. It appeared this would take place next week. Of key interest is the future of Walter Ulbricht.

Replaced by Honecker

Erich Honecker replaced the aging leader last May as party first secretary and it is said, Mr. Ulbricht did not move over willingly. Mr. Ulbricht retained his post as State Council chairman, a sort of titular presidency, and it is one of the posts that may change next week. Mr. Ulbricht last Sunday again was elected to the Volkskammer, or people's chamber.

A Politburo report read to the Central committee and reported by the news agency ADN said East Germany remained willing to make concessions in its talks with West Germany and West Berlin but on a reciprocal basis. In an unusually sharp tone, the report said that East Germany will not tolerate being cast in the position of "errand boy" or "recipient of orders" of the Western powers.

An agreement signed in September by the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union goes into effect when the two German sides agree on details of points provided for in the four-power pact.

Their discovery follows an international controversy centering on fears that the widely used pesticide could pose a serious pollution threat. It was thought DDT in soil remained toxic for long periods and was virtually impossible to destroy.

But laboratory experiments had shown soil organisms could almost entirely eradicate DDT within a month, given the right conditions, Tass said.

Their action was helped by temperatures of around 30 C, high humidity and the presence of certain organic compounds in the soil. The pesticide ultimately broke down into water and volatile products, some of which appeared to be eaten by the organisms, Tass added.

DDT Eliminated By Organisms, Russians Say

MOSCOW, Nov. 19 (Reuters)—Soviet scientists have found that micro-organisms in soil can break down the pesticide DDT and render it harmless, Tass reported today.

Luns Goes to Athens On Tour for NATO

ATHENS, Nov. 19 (UPI)—Joseph Luns, NATO's secretary-general, arrived today on a "get acquainted" tour of alliance capitals. He came here after spending three days in Turkey.

His arrival followed a government statement that since his appointment to NATO, Mr. Luns had been "emancipated from political slavery." As Dutch foreign minister, Mr. Luns was the subject of much criticism in Greek newspapers in 1969, at the time of the Scandinavian-Dutch motion to expel Greece from the Council of Europe. Greece withdrew from the council before a vote was taken.

Since his NATO appointment two months ago, Mr. Luns has said he recognizes Greece's strategic importance in the alliance.

Greece Freeing Arrested Judge

ATHENS, Nov. 19 (UPI)—The prosecutor of the Athens special military tribunal has ordered the release of Judge Christos Sartzetakis pending completion of an investigation into charges against him, an authoritative government source said today.

Mr. Sartzetakis, 41, the model for the judge in the film "Z," has been held in pretrial detention for 11 months without being indicted on accusations of conspiracy and violation of martial law. Police sources said his release from jail was expected later today.

Mr. Sartzetakis gained renown as the investigating magistrate who uncovered an assassination plot in the 1963 killing of leftist Deputy Gregory Lambrakis. Mr. Sartzetakis was dismissed from his judgeship after the colonels' coup d'état in April, 1967, and was arrested last Christmas Eve.

Brandt Party Challenging Tax Policies

Asks Rises to Pay for Domestic Reforms

BONN, Nov. 19 (AP)—The rank-and-file of Chancellor Willy Brandt's Social Democratic party challenged the leadership on economic policy today as a national party convention went into its second day.

More than 300 delegates, meeting in Bonn's Beethoven Concert Hall, voted for resolutions supporting higher personal and corporation taxes to pay for domestic reforms.

These were promised by Mr. Brandt when his coalition government of Social Democrats and Free Democrats came to power more than two years ago, but have not been fulfilled.

Against the wishes of Mr. Brandt and of Karl Schiller, Economics and Finance Minister, the convention has voted to increase corporation taxes to 56 percent from 51 percent and to raise the ceiling for personal income tax to 60 percent from 53 percent. The ceiling applies to incomes of about $40,000 or more for single persons.

Decisions Not Binding

The decisions are not binding on the government, but they reflect a feeling among the delegates, chosen by local party organizations, that Mr. Brandt's government has not done enough for the working man.

Mr. Brandt, speaking during the debate, has cautioned that the interests of business must be considered if the present high level of employment is to be maintained.

Mr. Schiller said that some of the convention's demands could put West German industry at a competitive disadvantage abroad and would also strengthen the Christian Democratic opposition's campaign against the Social Democrats. He noted that some businesses have been saying privately they would move abroad if tax increases in West Germany got out of hand.

In an apparent reaction to the convention's mood, Mr. Schiller indicated that there might be a temporary across-the-board reduction in income taxes next year. He has already promised to repay next year the 10 percent income tax surcharge imposed in 1970 to slow the overheated economy.

The convention ends tomorrow with a discussion of abortion law reforms against the wishes of the party leadership.

FAO Head to Stay

ROME, Nov. 19 (AP)—The governing conference of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization today amended FAO's constitution to give Adalberto H. Borzatta of the Netherlands a second four-year term as director-general. He will be formally re-elected Monday.

Mr. Borzatta, 41, the model for the judge in the film "Z," has been held in pretrial detention for 11 months without being indicted on accusations of conspiracy and violation of martial law. Police sources said his release from jail was expected later today.

Mr. Sartzetakis gained renown as the investigating magistrate who uncovered an assassination plot in the 1963 killing of leftist Deputy Gregory Lambrakis. Mr. Sartzetakis was dismissed from his judgeship after the colonels' coup d'état in April, 1967, and was arrested last Christmas Eve.

Czechs, W. Germans Set 5th Talk Round

ROTHEBURG-OB-DER-TAUBER, West Germany, Nov. 19 (Reuters)—Czechoslovak and West German negotiators today ended their fourth session of talks at this small town west of Nuremberg with agreement to have a fifth.

Deputy Foreign Ministers Paul Frank of West Germany and Jiri Goetz of Czechoslovakia, leading their sides in the quest for a treaty to normalize relations, left the date for the next meeting open.

ART IN EUROPE

Hartung in Paris, Surrealism in London, Courtyard in Rome

PARIS

Hartung, Galerie de France, 3 Faubourg Saint-Honore, Paris 8, to Feb. 12.

Twelve large paintings that bear the distinctive mark of Hans Hartung, his cold yellows and blues, his occasional lightning streak slashed into the pigment, but sometimes with innovations in color and form, a suggestion of perspective here, a warmer brown elsewhere.

seen. The latter include a sequence of 15 that are published in conjunction with a poem on death by the late Jean Frol who was a friend of the artist's.

Victor Hugo's Drawings, Maison de Victor Hugo, 6 Place des Vosges, Paris 4, to Jan. 31.

Aside from being an enormously productive writer and mythical persona of his day, Victor Hugo was also a curiously gifted draftsman. His fantasies of Gothic castles would have pleased King Ludwig of Bavaria with their intricate architecture and the murky aura of mystery sometimes achieved by spilling black coffee over the finished drawing.

wishes, credit Hugo with having invented tachism (e.g. item 57 in the catalogue). The inflated rhetoric of his encounters in Hugo's writing sometimes also appears in his drawings, while the freer and more bizarre forms of his graphic imagination have caused him to be hailed as a precursor by the surrealists.

Bidonna, Galerie Gerald Baran, 16 Place des Vosges, Paris 4, to Nov. 27.

This little antique shop has a fairly large cellar below that serves as a gallery. The seemingly non-representational paintings of Jacques Bidonna, now on display, hold suggestions of barren or chaotic desert landscapes.

Weidemann, Galerie Ariel, 140 Boulevard Haussmann, Paris 8, to Dec. 4.

Norwegian painter Jakob Weidemann has produced a series of paintings that vibrate with coolly Nordic and sensitively transparent colors. Nearly all are titled "wildflower" and are in fact an impressionistically abstract aura of color surrounding a quasi immaterial focus.

their discrete intensity they manage to suggest the ultimately immaterial frailty of all life.

Rosofsky, Galerie du Dragon, 19 Rue du Dragon, Paris 6, to Nov. 27.

In these pastels (and a couple of oils) Rosofsky seems to be using a surrealist idiom, but it is soon apparent that he is beyond surrealism. More often than not he is using the language to give expression to some well defined ideas about immaturity and inner constraints such as they can be felt in our society.

—MICHAEL GIBSON.

LONDON

Deuglas Portway, Marjorie Farr Gallery, 385 King's Road, Chelsea, London S.W.3, to Nov. 27.

This is Portway's 23d one-man exhibition since 1959, which is some indication both of his prolific output and of his popularity. His abstraction is studied yet one has the comparatively rare feeling that his ways of thinking and composition are by nature abstract. Portway's sense of color is impeccable; and so is what one might term his sense of balance. Thus these large and elegant works appeal equally to the "artistic" and to the "scientific" mind.

Britain's Contribution to Surrealism of the '30s and '40s, Hamet Gallery, 8 Cork St., London W.1, to Nov. 27.

At last an English gallery has mounted a full-scale exhibition as an appreciation of the important contribution of British painters and sculptors made to the international surrealist movement and the effect that surrealist theory had on British art from 1930 on.

Among the internationally famous are S.W. Bayler, Merly, Evans, Julian Trevelyan, Carl Richards, Roland Penrose, Paul Nash and Henry Moore. But by no means inferior are works by some who are still—unjustly—less famous: Conroy Maddox, John Lake, John Banting, and John Melville; as well as works by those who have reverted to the more orthodox English romantic path—Burra, Collins, Tunnard and Wadsworth.

Opening Exhibition, The Surrealist Art Centre, 31 Brook St., London W.1.

The European side of surrealism is well represented in what promises to be an exciting permanent center in London for international surrealism. Pride of place in the opening show must be accorded to a Delvaux, "La Ville Endormie," which is of museum quality. A second Delvaux, "Le Songe," was done later, but is of great beauty. There is an excellent Dali recollection of childhood and a superb Magritte, Bellmer, Masson, Tanguy, Ernst, Delvaux's "Le Songe" at Surrealist Art Centre, London.

Matta, Brauner and Dominguez are also represented in the exhibition, which is in general of museum and great collector quality.

—MAX WYKES-JOYCE

ROME

Domenico Notardonato, 154 Via Monserrato, Rome, to Nov. 25.

Domenico Notardonato, a painter from southern Italy, has taken a baroque Roman courtyard, and with great naturalness, transformed it into an exhibition. You don't know where the art begins and the background stops. Have the baskets been left down by the neighbors for mail? Does the shovel hang on the wall for its satisfying shape—or has someone left it there? Are the leaning frames part of the carpenter's shop—or part of the show? On a roped-off square of cobble, it says plainly: "This space reserved for a work of art they won't let me do."

Something is added to the courtyard but nothing is imposed. It and art live side by side enhancing each other. A vivid red drape mirrored in an obelisk is, "Hello, Magritte." A puddle floats exclamation marks. A bird call sprouts from a flower pot seeded with railroad tickets to Sublimo, Ovid's hometown. There are other things that make doubly significant the curbsome roller in a corner and the wash flapping languidly about.

attempt is very welcome spontaneous and poet mixes "art things" a reality, so that each recognized anew and as a whole. If nothing courtyard exhibition, the exasperation of you with galleries all over Marie Surbone, Marg Via Giulia, Rome, to Surbone's neat abstr made of cut-into card incisions, flaps raised ing so that their shar make them into "rel paper is sometimes bright yellow, blue or These ingenious surfi shed ordinary design reliefs in a row of ment each other, but r ones look tidy, subtle set.

John Walker
Nov. 19 (LHT)—The rock musical "Godspell" is a message to the young and old which dressed as a vaudeville act
of the Gospel actress. Matthew Chapel, the creator of the show, has been able to add a dash of humor, deriving
from his dazzling
theatrical techniques
in simple conjuring soft-shoe shuffles and hymns. "Turn Back
Forever Thy Foolish
Step" is in the manner of the cue from St. Matthew: "Ye shall be converted as little children, and enter into the kingdom of heaven: for he that is exalted shall be as a child."

Centennial
The centennial of the birth of the French
poet, Paul Verlaine, is being celebrated by a concert of the National Orchestra
under the baton of Almeida. The program will feature works by Debussy, Ravel, and Messiaen.

of excitable monkeys, Jesus sings
the banal lines:
"O God, I'm dying
"O God, I'm dead"

Apart from this failure, Stephen Schwartz has provided many fine and exhilarating songs. In "I'll be a King," although "Godspell" stuns the mind, it delights the ear and the eye.

Robert Shaw's "Cato Street" deserves better treatment than the confused and muddled staging it receives at the Young Vic. Significantly, the program lists no director. The play is based on an historical event, the Cato Street conspiracy of 1820, when a group of working class revolutionaries attempted to murder the entire British cabinet and failed hopelessly, due to their own incompetence and betrayal by a government spy.

Mr. Shaw has changed the sex of the leaders of the plot, thus giving Vanessa Redgrave the opportunity for a powerful performance. He sometimes strives overhard for modish modern parallels so that the villain of the piece, Lord Sidmouth (an excellent performance by John Arlott), talks not only of law and order but also of the moral pollution of the country. There are some clumsy moments, including a stereotype homosexual to provide comic relief. But Mr. Shaw writes with uncommon passion, particularly in a debate between moderates and extremists on the best means to implement revolution. The play reaches a grim and moving conclusion with the on-stage execution of six conspirators.

At the Shaw Theatre, there is an excellent revival of Willis Hall's strong and gripping war drama, "The Long and the Short and the Tall," about an incompetent group of British soldiers who find themselves stranded behind the Japanese front line.

On the Arts Agenda

An anniversary concert devoted to the works of Darius Milhaud, who will be 80 next year, will be given Nov. 21 by the Ars Nova ensemble, conducted by Marius Constant, at the Espace Pierre Cardin in Paris, in the presence of the composer.

The first appearance of Natalia Makarova with London's Royal Ballet and the first performance by the company of Jerome Robbins' "Afternoon of a Faun" are among the features of the 1971

MUSIC IN PARIS
Christoff Sings Mussorgsky
In Paris Opéra Series

By David Stevens

PARIS, Nov. 19 (LHT)—Music drama comes in many forms, and it does not necessarily need scenery, costumes and a wise en scene, as Boris Christoff overwillingly demonstrated last night in the third of the Paris Opéra's series of recitals and concerts. The Bulgarian bass has been at or near the top of the heap for more than two decades, and if, at 52, he seems to be appearing less in the opera house these days, there was nothing last night to suggest that vocal backsliding has anything to do with it. Contrary to the impression given by recordings, his voice is not a heavy one, as basses go. Its special character comes from its Slavic darkness, combined with a flexibility and control that permits a seemingly infinite variety of tonal and dynamic nuances. All of this, plus a vivid theatrical sense, was put at the service of Mussorgsky last night, with the assistance of the Opéra orchestra under Richard Blareau, not to mention Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazunov in most of the orchestrations. The death scene from "Boris Godunov" could hardly have been more gripping on a stage, perhaps because both singer and audience could concentrate on the music and—even for non-Russian speakers—the words. The slight crumpling of the singer's large frame at the moment of death had the impact of the usual spectacular fall from the throne. Christoff also sang seven of the composer's songs, ranging from the early "King Saul Before the Battle"—dating from 1883, when the composer was 24, but which already shows his sense of inner drama and individual way of transforming Slavic musical influences—through the four "Songs and Dances of Death."

One exception to this preoccupation with death was "Gopak," and Christoff tossed off its vigorous rustic humor with immense verve. He has, after all, sung three bass roles—the tormented czar, the salient Finca, and the drunken Varlam—in his recordings of "Boris."

Mahler also was preoccupied with death and with the use of folk elements in music, although far more ambiguously in both cases. His romantic inclination for macabre humor, grim nostalgia and nightmarish moods is strongly present in the 13 songs from "Des Knaben Wunderhorn" that formed the first half of an all-Mahler program Wednesday by the National Orchestra of the French Radio under Jean Martinon.

The nocturnal drama is so vivid in the music of these songs as to banish any notion of scenic effect, yet it is tempting to wonder what the result would have been had any of Mahler's frequent operatic projects ever come to fruition.

The theatrical element in the songs was more overtly served by the baritone Siegmund Nimsgo, who vividly drove home his texts and in the strongly accented conducting of Martinon. Mezzo soprano Jocelyne Tuillon brought rich vocal and quiet humor to her duties, and tranquilly closed the song-group with the "Urlicht" solo from the Second Symphony.

Gala Performance by the company, scheduled for Dec. 14 in the presence of the Queen Mother. The former Kirov ballerina, partnered by David Wall, will appear in diversissements from "Swan Lake" and "Giselle" while Margot Fonteyn and Rudolf Nureyev will do the balcony pas de deux from "Romeo and Juliet." "Checkmate," by Ninette de Valois to the score of Sir Arthur Bliss, will be revived after an absence of almost a decade for the same program, and in honor of the composer's 80th birthday year. Robert Helpmann will dance the Red King, the role he created in 1937, and Monica Mason and Nureyev also are in the cast. The Robbins-Debusay work will be danced by Antoinette Sibley and Anthony Dowell. The Polish composer Witold Lutoslawski will be given the 1971 Prize of the Ravel Foundation on Nov. 21 at the Théâtre des Champs-Élysées. The event will include a concert of chamber music by Ravel and Lutoslawski.

THE UNFASHIONABLE HUMAN BODY
 By Bernard Rudofsky. Illustrated. Doubleday & Co. 281 pp. $12.95.

Reviewed by Harold Rosenberg

MAN (including woman) is constantly working on himself. He is an artist who uses his body as a medium to create an effect. He flattens or peaks his skull, paints his head or covers it with wigs, dwarfs or deforms his feet, squeezes his torso into odd shapes, enlarges or shrinks his organs, hides his face behind masks, veils or natural or artificial beards. He projects his form into gods and monsters by combining it with segments of animals, producing men whose heads belong to lions or whose hind parts to horses, and women whose bodies are birds or fish.

The chief agency of human metamorphosis is clothes, from the bustle and the corset to the sarong and the false eyelashes. Clothes conceal parts of the body and at the same time call attention to them. Dress is not the antithesis of nakedness but its accomplice. Women in Mohammedan countries by covering their faces render them potentially invisible. The body itself may be thought of as a disguise, as in La Rochefoucauld's quip that the bath is a masquerade, and Iago's contempt for wearing one's heart on one's sleeve. Perhaps it is the feeling that the body is something worse than has led to so much tailoring of it.

"The Unfashionable Human Body" is a rich documentation of what might be called body art. One could regard as its thesis its author's observation that "people derive infinitely greater satisfaction from an artifact, however crude, than from nature's product." To Bernard Rudofsky, this satisfaction is predominantly sexual. Societies that curtail women's feet do so in order to enlarge their response.

Given the function of dress in stimulating desire, its dominant principle is ceaseless change. Rudofsky sees the sex motive as introducing into fashion a dynamics analogous to that of erotic impulse and its satisfaction. A stirring of interest mounts to assent, action and satiation, then dies away into indifference and rejection. The constant reappareance of the body—Rudofsky presents illustrations by Christo, the artist who wraps up buildings, objects and sections of landscape—has, apparently, kept sex going by an endless succession of rechargings, at the same time that it has served the inhibitions of fear and morality.

Rudofsky seems partial to nudity and sexual freedom—that is, to the body in nature's raw state—and opposed to concealment and self-denial. But he seems reluctant to cope with the fact that the realization of naturality would, if his premise of the undestrability of the body is correct, bring the history of both fashion and sex to a close. Animals can count on the continuance of their ornamentation contributed by nature; in contrast, man and woman are confronted by the choice between making themselves up, for reasons good and bad, or allowing themselves to decline into the poor forked creature that learned to be ashamed of itself in Eden. Rudofsky, who is, among other things, a designer, seems oddly to promote the opinion that styles in clothes have been largely inspired by foolishness, boredom and self-induced fright, and that the time has come for a terminal reversion to nudity.

Theories and prophecies aside, "The Unfashionable Human Body" is a lavish miscellany of things done to the body, or added to or subtracted from it, as means for heightening its effect on others. It is a learned poking into sartorial corners, accompanied by a tracing of origins infrequently given attention: for example, the emergence of angelic out of pre-Christian winged creatures and the succession of sects in placing the wings—of the function of the cross if men's trousers in dealing with the problem of the cylindrical pants leg. Much of Rudofsky's data belongs to the things-you never-knew-till-now category, though he rounds up, too, better known aspects of costume, such as the use of the pipe to create an impression of masculinity and of the beard to lend an air of authority.

Rudofsky's aim has been not a systematic analysis of human garb or a chronological account of fashions but something closer to a gallery of absurdities achieved in covering and decorating the body. An outstanding virtue of his book is its illustrations, which range from a 13th-century miniature of Adam and Eve before the Fall, in which both are equipped with male genitalia, to an advertisement for a therapeutic electric corset, game masks and bikini women by Saul Steinberg and Pope with a square halo.

Rudofsky writes easily and wit—he notes, for example, that in this country many "still regard the body with suspicion." Occasionally, however, he yields to the temptation to fall into vulgar descriptions and stily gas as when he writes that "too many genitals are in the house," or that the halo "already old hat" before it is placed in Christian art. This is of levity comes dangerously close to budesquing its subject, particularly a subject that lends itself so easily to it. Rudofsky at his best when he explores the origins and esthetics of the hat not when he advises the reader that "martyrs are never caught with their haloes dangling."

The International Federation of Football Associations (FIFA) will organize its own 1976 amateur world soccer championships in the International Olympic Committee (IOC) cuts the final-round field from 16 to either 12 or eight teams, FIFA officials announced.

The Liberty Bowl announced that Arkansas had agreed to play in the Dec. 20 classic at Memphis, Tenn. The only way for Arkansas, with a 7-2-1 won-lost record, to wind up in Dallas on New Year's Day would be for heavily favored Texas to lose and for Arkansas to defeat Texas Tech. An opponent in the Liberty Bowl has not been named.

The International Swimming Federation (FINA) said at Singapore that it would take no action on the readmission of membership was received from Peking. The announcement was made in reply to a question by the Japanese delegate, Peking withdrew from the federation in 1952 when Taiwan was admitted. It was disclosed that Taiwan is two years behind in FINA membership dues and would be disqualified unless payment is made by Dec. 15.
